RBR secures strategic new operations base 10km from Mozambique's $70b LNG construction site

RBR will use this established camp to train workers for construction jobs

Key Points

- RBR secures immediate lease at established camp site in the Mozambican town of Palma
- The camp site will provide RBR with a key strategic operations base less than 10km from Mozambique's giant LNG construction site and close to the Palma airport and marina
- RBR will establish a training centre on site and ramp up preparation of employment-ready construction workers
- Up to 50,000 workers will be required across three world-scale LNG projects

RBR (ASX: RBR) is pleased to announce another pivotal step in its strategy to supply training and labour to Mozambique's emerging $70b LNG construction industry, with the Company securing a key new operations base less than 10km away.

RBR has secured a strategic sublease to the established Wentworth camp site in the town of Palma which will enable it to scale up operations and train workers for construction jobs in the nearby LNG industry.

The camp is located less than 10km from the Mozambique LNG construction site, less than 1km from both the Palma airport and Palma marina and across the road from the well-known Amarula hotel, which is a popular venue for visiting expatriates (see images on last page of this release).

Wentworth was established in the early 2000s as a petroleum exploration camp and was built to oil and gas industry standards at the time. The site is approximately 11 acres (44,000m²) in size, is connected to the national power grid, and provided (at its peak) accommodation, office space, medical and recreational facilities, catering and support infrastructure for over 100 people. The current head-leaseholder intends to undertake significant improvements and further development of the camp.

RBR's plans to base its training and labour hire/recruitment operations at the site complement these development plans.

Delivering skilled labour to site, every day

RBR's tenancy in this unique site provides accommodation for trainers, catering, classrooms and both undercover and open-air facilities for training in health & safety, work-readiness and practical skills such as scaffolding and rigging. The site delivers rapid deployment opportunities to the RBR team.

RBR's current operations at the nearby Amarula Hotel do not afford RBR the ability to expand operations in line with its growth strategy whereas the Wentworth camp is perfectly suited to RBR's ambitions in terms of scale and independence through dedicated facilities.

RBR will transition operational activities from Amarula to Wentworth over coming weeks.
